

EXAMPLES FOR THE TRAINER

Bad luck is bad luck. Imagine a very ambitious team that submits many projects and grants for co-financing in their company. The day of the next bid and the date of submitting the application for funding comes.

The work of the whole team is two weeks of intensive work, many hours on the concept and details of the form. The constant struggle with the generator. In this situation, you never know if something will come of it, if you will be able to get new funds, new opportunities for action ... It's a constant uncertainty in the team.

Openness to change can be observed in such a team, where their work depends on the results. There are people who, despite the need for change, do not lose the joy of life. There are people who, remaining in uncertainty, can direct their thoughts to areas of life that depend only on them. But there are also those who have already lost, although the ball is still in play. And who are you? Which group are you presenting? How quickly can you pick yourself up after a failure?

How fast do you brush it off and keep walking?
